

Shyra Barberstock, PhD

Co-Founder, President & CEO

Kebaonish Coffee/Tea
Company

Dr. Shyra Barberstock is an Anishinaabe (Indigenous) entrepreneur, educator, public speaker, and systems thinker dedicated to creating pathways for community, prosperity, and connection. She is the CEO and co-founder of Okwaho Equal Source Inc., an Indigenous-owned consultancy advancing social innovation and economic development, and Kebaonish Inc., an Indigenous- and woman-owned tea and coffee company rooted in culture, relationship, and the simple power of gathering together.

A sought-after advisor and speaker, Shyra's work spans business, education, and climate leadership. She is a co-host of the Indigenous Climate Hub Podcast and serves as an Adjunct Professor at Smith School of Business at Queen's University, where she teaches Relationships and Reconciliation in Business and Beyond in the Commerce program. Across every role, her purpose remains the same: to create spaces where people, communities, and ideas can thrive together.

Shaped by both vision and resilience, Shyra believes success is measured not only in growth, but in the courage to lead with values, care for community, and create opportunity for the next generation of women entrepreneurs.

Her message is simple: trust your voice, move with purpose, and build the future you want to see—one meaningful step at a time.
